

Catherine Edman is a senior staff writer at the Daily Herald who's covered education and municipal government for most of her career. She's won three investigative awards for her work uncovering: a $12 million state project that was built, then never used; abuses at a county jail resulting in costly lawsuits; and, most recently, along with fellow reporter Jeffrey Gaunt, abuses in the Illinois tax cap system. The Daily Herald series on the taxing abuses resulted in changes in the state law in 2006. Edman is a graduate of Southern Illinois University.